One opportunity for involvement within a sorority community is serving as a sorority recruitment counselor. The sorority recruitment counselor guides potential new members (PNMs) through the sorority recruitment process. This position is considered a peer leadership educator role filled by an experienced undergraduate sorority woman who is responsible for providing impartial advice to women interested in joining the sorority community. The recruitment counselor role has many requirements but one most notably is to disassociate or temporarily step away from or separate oneself from sorority membership. The purpose of this interpretive qualitative study was to describe the perspectives of sorority recruitment counselors as they negotiate disassociating from each of their sororities for a finite period. Framed in the lens of Bridges (2004) and Schlossberg's (1981) approaches to transition, I sought to describe the participants' experiences as each moved into, through, and on from this role returning to sorority life. Eight sorority recruitment counselors from one university campus participated in the study in the fall of 2014. The recruitment counselors were interviewed using Seidman's (2013) three series phenomenological interview technique. Participants described their experiences in two ways or two categories: the recruitment counselor experience and negotiating disassociation. The results indicate that recruitment counselors find disassociation a necessary requirement to performing this role although more emphasis on what it means to actually be disassociated from sorority membership is needed. Implications for those who advise fraternity and sorority life as well as opportunities for additional and extended research are also addressed. The Ultimate Guide to Writing Powerful Letters of Recommendation Reza Nazari, 2023-02-20 For anyone seeking to create a persuasive recommendation letter that can greatly influence a candidate's application success, this book is an invaluable resource.
