11. STRUCTURED POPULATIONS (pp. 2881-2882)

- 11.1. Explain the three components that form a population. How do these components change over time? Why are not the three components equal after one or two time steps?
- 11.2. Define three components of a plant population, and their examples of an animal population. Answer in full sentences. (Important: read section 11.1 very carefully. Note that the difference between the two is that plants have reproductive structures, while animals do not. However, flowering plants are exceptions.)
- 11.3. Name four components that make up a plant population. How do they affect each other? Answer in full sentences. (Important: It is not the reflection that reproduction is necessary, but the ability to affect other species in the plant community.)
- 11.4. Plan a series of five following experiments. Explain the location where you will do the experiments and why. Describe, measure, compare, and identify the effects.
 - 11.4.1. Watering: Decrease (greater reduction in the efficiency of Leaf Transpiration).
 - 11.4.2. Pruning or clipping operation: Take notes from the forestry industry, which uses similar tools on the insects.
 - 11.4.3. Introducing: Introduce other plants from other species within the same space.
 - 11.4.4. From humans: people as insect hosts (adults only).
 - 11.4.5. Contagious disease: use contaminated water. By introducing frogs in the pond, insects can increase in their adult forms.
