Abstract

Case studies were developed at Harvard University, Cranfield University and Thunderbird University for advanced learning among MBA students and for PhD research. These publications and internet searches, added significantly to global leadership. At University of Phoenix, Personal Finance course was offered as part of the First-Year Sequence of Courses. Teaching this course proved a challenge, because the number of hours per class was limited to 20 as opposed to 45 hours in traditional settings. At Dominican College, Applied Electronics, International Management and Global E-Commerce courses were given. Using case studies in these courses reinforced learning, encouraged team work, and provided the formula for success. Students raved about these courses. This paper gives a summary report.

Keyword: Applied Electronics, International Management, Global E-Commerce, Leadership and Personal Finance

Harvard University, Cranfield University UK, and Thunderbird University have been publishing case studies for 20+ years. While teaching courses in business schools, one would use real-life case studies as the backbone of research, Hsu (2008). Since 1996, internet e-commerce has become the new paradigm for business and education. Final projects using real-life case studies proved to be very successful for learning.

(A) Dominican College

Dominican College is located 14 miles northwest of New York City. Donald Hsu joined Dominican College in 1988 as an Associate Professor in the Business Division. The Business Division offers Bachelor of Science programs in Accounting, Computer Information Systems (CIS), Economics, and five concentrations of management: Financial Management, Human Resource Management, Information Systems Management (MIS), International Management (IM), and Marketing Management. A Master's Degree in Business Administration (MBA) was approved by the State of New York in 2008. Hsu served as the Director of Business Administration Division from 1990 to 1996, and taught courses in MIS and IM.
