

Section 10.1: Population and communities

Concepts and theory

Populations and communities

Checklist

1. DEFINITION: POPULATION (pp. 384-385)
What are the living organisms that form a population? In other words?
They are all the same species, just living close to or together together.
2. Give two examples of a plant population and two examples of an animal population.
Answers will vary. Examples could include trees in a forest, bacteria in a Petri dish, grass, mushrooms, etc. Plants should also include the species for example Grasses or Mushrooms.
3. Name four things that affect a population's density?
Answers will vary. It can still be whatever they think makes density go up or go down, such as other other species in the same environment.
4. Five aspects of tree harvesting are: cutting, felling, thinning, thinning and thinning. The first three are very similar, although thinning can be separate since especially the cutting and felling requires cutting down by the species of tree. Thinning is a thinning or logging operation that removes trees from the harvesting operation, because they have been cut down already.
a) In this logging, a removal from the forest that does not cut down
b) From forests which is more health friendly.
c) Can change because it can increase yields by thinning trees in the most dense part of the forest.

Example	Process	Effects on population size
1	Thinning	Decrease
2	Thinning	Decrease
3	Thinning	Decrease
4	Thinning	Decrease
5	Thinning	Decrease
