

School Nutrition Case Study: Tips and Examples

As schools and districts across the US implement their Local Wellness Policies, many organizations and agencies are collecting case studies of successful improvements in school nutrition environments. An excellent online example of such a collection is the Michigan Healthy School Success Story Web Site sponsored by a coalition of the American Cancer Society, Michigan Action for Healthy Kids, Michigan Department of Community Health, Michigan State University Extension, and United Dairy Industry of Michigan. You can view their stories at <http://www.mihhealthtools.org/schoolsuccess/>

Sharing your school's nutrition success story has benefits for your department and for other schools too! Your program benefits from the exposure and recognition for healthy changes; other schools can put your good ideas to work in their programs!

The specific format of a case study varies from one group to another. The organization or individual collecting the case studies will usually specify the format for the information they want. They also may provide a specific template for a school to use. One example of an online template can be found of the Mississippi Office of Healthy Schools Web site at http://www.healthyschoolsms.org/ohs\_main/success/. The template is also available as a PDF at http://www.healthyschoolsms.org/ohs\_main/documents/successful\_contract.pdf

Whatever the format, all case studies have several important things in common:

- Accurate contact information: Be sure to include an Email address and school nutrition Web site (if available).
- Descriptive information about your school/district: Nutrition directors are always interested in the number of students and rate of free/reduced participation. With this information, they can get a rough idea of how your school/district compares to theirs.
- Details of your successes: Describe the changes in your meals, foodservice, vending, nutrition education, and/or wellness activities. Provide as much detail in as few words as possible. People want to hear your success story, but everyone is busy!
- Keys to success: People also want to know how you did what you did. As you write a case study, take a minute to reflect on how you were able to make the changes that you have made. Your words of wisdom could be about the attitude of your staff or team, grants you received, individuals/groups you partnered with, or helpful resources that you used. Think about a few things that really helped you succeed – things that might help another school make the same sorts of changes.

Here are two examples of school nutrition case studies with different formats for different purposes. The first, written for an online course, is much shorter than the second. When you are writing your case study, you can use these examples and the tips above to tell your story in the most positive and useful way possible.

One more tip: Start putting your success story together now – even before someone asks you for one. A case study makes a nice handout for local presentations – and, when you do see a call for a success story or a case study, you'll be ready to go!!
