The Ocean Sunfish

The ocean sunfish is also known as the common mola. It is one of the heaviest fish with bones in the world. With its flat, short body, this fish has a feature look. The sunfish can grow more than 10 feet long and 14 feet tall. It can weigh up to 1,000 pounds, and females are bigger than males. It doesn't have much of a tail which adds to its strange appearance. This fish swims with its strong dorsal and anal fins, moving along at a slow pace, soaking up the sun near the surface of the water. It does not have scales, but its skin is covered in mucus.

The sunfish eats lots of different prey but really enjoys jellyfish. It uses its mouth like a vacuum cleaner to suck them up. The mucus on its skin protects it from being stung by the jellyfish's tentacles. The stomach of the sunfish is also mucus-based for the same reason. Sunfish must eat a lot of jellyfish to get its hug! A full-grown sunfish probably doesn't have to worry about being eaten by anything, but small and medium-sized ones can be the prey of sea lions, killer whales, and some sharks.

Because they are docile and curious, sunfish are a favorite of scuba divers and people visiting aquariums. People enjoy watching this interesting creature.
