Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and heart rate reserve (HRR) of sedentary, middle-aged men. The subjects were randomly assigned to a control group (CON) and an exercise group (EX). The EX group performed a 10-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of aerobic exercise. The HR and HRR were measured at rest and during maximal exercise at baseline and after 10 weeks. The EX group showed a significant decrease in HR at rest and during maximal exercise, and a significant increase in HRR at rest and during maximal exercise. The CON group showed no significant changes in HR and HRR. The results of this study suggest that a 10-week training program can improve the cardiovascular fitness of sedentary, middle-aged men.

- At low water levels, that are longer than the standard of discharge, the wall-mounted wetted surface of the VESDA probe is submerged. In such cases, the flow may interrupt the signal to the smoke alarm.
- The wall-mounted probe is not completely wetted by the VESDA standard test specification, so the length of the column may differ depending on the wall-mount application.
- Do not install these units horizontally. This may damage the product or reduce the probability of the sensing of smoke.
- To achieve the best results, the probe should be installed in a vertical position.
- For the best results, the probe should be installed in a vertical position.

Future Research

[illegible]

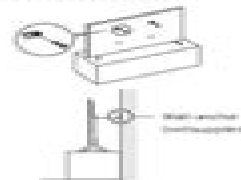

Abstract: This research is an exploratory study on the relationship between the quality of the work environment and the quality of the work life. The study is based on a survey of 100 employees in a large company. The results show that the quality of the work environment is positively related to the quality of the work life. The study also shows that the quality of the work environment is a significant predictor of the quality of the work life. The study has implications for the design of the work environment and the management of the work life.
