Communication Theories for Everyday Life introduces readers to the complexities of theories in communication studies, mass communication and public relations, emphasizing their connection to everyday life. Features Contextualizes theory with an introductory chapter in each of the main content areas that introduces the theories and research in the field, showing students how the theories developed. Features new theories and subject areas not present in most traditional communication theory textbooks, including new interactive technologies, feminist scholarship, British cultural studies, semiotics, postmodernism and critical race theory. Emphasizes the application of some theories across many subject areas through headings in the form of questions that encourage students to process material and explore for themselves how theories and content apply to their lives. Uses case study chapters that demonstrate to students how each subject area would use theory to solve or understand issues in everyday life. Reviews theories for the three main genres of communication: communication studies, mass communication and public relations with balanced coverage examining the unique contributions each area has made to the field of communication as a whole. A Question of Sedition is a book that students of the Roosevelt years and indeed anyone who cares about the First Amendment right of free speech will want to read. It is the first book to examine the attempt by the Roosevelt Administration to use its special war-time sedition powers to suppress the major black newspapers during World War II. Drawing on interviews and pages of government documents many recently declassified, Washburn describes how Attorney General Francis Biddle stood in the way of Roosevelt despite enormous pressure because of his own strong commitment to Constitutional principles.
