9 Security Procedures

Describe the process for obtaining identifications (IDs) and passwords. Include information concerning network access and confidentiality requirements.

9.1 Security Features

| Feature | Description |
|---|---|
| Access Controls | Provide access controls that your organization has put in place to restrict access to objects, commands, rows, and the granted and revoked commands. |
| Identification and authentication controls | Ensure that each authorized user can log onto the server. |
| Stringent of limits | Limits how to deny privileged data to specified users or from and designated levels via particular sensitive tasks. |
| Network based access | Provide security services on individual users and protect data transmitted among machines on a network. |
| Auditing | Provides the capability to audit actions such as logins, logouts, server start operations, stored procedure calls, accesses to database objects, and actions performed for a specific row or inside a particular role policy. |

9.2 Security Procedures

Describe the major tasks that are required to administer the system in a secure manner and refers you to the documentation that contains the instructions for performing each task.

| # | Task | Description |
|---|---|---|
| 1 | Install server | This task includes preparing for installation, loading files from your distribution medium, performing the actual installation, and administering the resources that are required. |

| # | Task | Description |
|---|---|---|
| 2 | Set up a secure administrative environment | This includes auditing, granting roles to individual users to ensure individual accountability, and assigning login names to System Administrators and Security Officers. |
| 3 | Add user logins to the server, add users to databases, establish resource limits, and manage and configure authorization | Add logins, create groups, add users to databases, drop and lock logins, and assign initial passwords, assign roles to users, create user-defined roles, and define role hierarchies and mutual exclusivity of roles. |
| 4 | Administer permissions for users, groups, and roles | Grant and revoke permissions for certain day commands, ensuring certain system procedures, and Accessing databases, tables, particular table columns, and views. |
| 5 | Administer the use of remote servers | Establish and administer the access from a permitted between servers, add and drop remote server access, and map remote login names to local login names. |
| 6 | Set up and maintain auditing | Determine what is to be audited, audit the use of [server] and use the audit trail to detect penetration of the system and misuse of resources. |
| 7 | Set up your installation for network-based security services | Configure the server to use services, such as unified login, data confidentiality and encryption, data integrity and determine security for remote procedures. |

9.3 Guidelines for setting up security

Use the guidelines described in the following sections when you set up security on [server].

9.3.1 Using the sa login

When [server] is installed, a single login called "sa" is configured with the System Administrator and Security Officer roles. This means that the "sa" login has unlimited power.

Use the "sa" login only during initial setup. Instead of allowing several users to use the "sa" account, establish individual accountability by assigning specific roles to individual administrators.

9.3.2 Changing the sa Login Password

The "sa" login is configured initially with a "NULL" password. Use sp_password to change the password immediately after installation.

9.3.3 When to enable auditing

Enable auditing early in the administration process so that you have a record of privileged commands that are executed by Security Officers and System Administrators. You might also want to audit commands that are executed by those with other special roles, such as operators when they dump and load databases.

9.3.4 Assigning login names

Assign [server] login names that are the same as their respective operating system login names. This makes logging in to [server] easier, simplifies management of server and operating system login accounts, and makes it easier to correlate the audit data generated by [server] with that of the operating system.

9.4 Network-Based Security

Describe the approach to enabling network-based security. For example:

The [server] provides network-based security services that enable you to authenticate users and protect data transmitted among machines on a network. In a distributed client/server computing environment (an area or deployment with confidential data), With [server], you can use security services provided by third-party providers to authenticate users, encrypt data, and prevent data tampering.

Depending upon the security mechanism you choose, [server] allows you to use one or more of these security services:

- Unified login - use a security mechanism to authenticate users once without requiring them to supply a name and password every time that log in to an [server]

- Message confidentiality - encrypt data over the network

- Mutual authentication - use the security mechanism to verify the identity of the client and the server

- Message integrity - verify that data communications have not been modified

- Replay detection - verify that data has not been intercepted by an intruder

- Out-of-sequence check - verify the order of data communications

- Message origin checks - verify the origin of the message
